How do I verify if I am in the right course?

You can view a list of all the active courses with which you are associated. If you find a course is missing, you can let your professor or law school admin know and Kaplan can add you to that course.

Where will I see quizzes that have been assigned to me?

When a quiz has been published to your section, that quiz will appear under “Assigned Quizzes” with the date it was assigned, the quiz name, section name, number of questions within the quiz, and end date for quiz submission. Each of these may be sorted, so for example, if you sort by End Date, you can complete the quizzes which are due earliest.

How do I complete my assigned quiz?

By selecting “Take Quiz,” you will have the opportunity to enter your answers in the answer grid and submit the quiz for immediate grading. You may also pause the quiz and come back to it later from My Assigned Quizzes by selecting “Resume Quiz.” To submit the quiz for grading, select “Submit.”

A federal statute provides that "denials of Medicare reimbursement to individuals for medical or psychiatric treatment are appealable to the federal courts, the judgment of which shall be enforced by the Medicare commissioner following review for determination of consistency with the purposes of the Medicare program." The commissioner rules that certain individuals with pre-existing conditions are not eligible for reimbursement for the cost of an experimental cancer-treatment program. The government of a state, which is the residence of the individuals denied reimbursement, challenges the statute, requiring appeal to the federal court as unconstitutional.

What is the likely outcome of the suit?

A The statute granting federal court jurisdiction over Medicare disputes will be found constitutional, under the Article III power of Congress.

B The statute granting federal court jurisdiction over Medicare disputes will be found constitutional, because the reimbursement dispute presents a federal question.

C The statute granting federal court jurisdiction over Medicare disputes will be found unconstitutional, because federal court jurisdiction granted under the statute is barred by the Eleventh Amendment.

D The statute granting federal court jurisdiction over Medicare disputes will be found unconstitutional, because the federal courts are prohibited from rendering advisory opinions.

Explanation

The correct answer is: The statute granting federal court jurisdiction over Medicare disputes will be found unconstitutional, because the federal courts are prohibited from rendering advisory opinions.

Discussion of correct answer: Federal courts have jurisdiction only over "cases or controversies," and are prohibited from rendering advisory opinions. Article III limits federal court jurisdiction to "cases and controversies." A federal court judgment on a dispute over eligibility for reimbursement would be an impermissible advisory opinion, because the statute has the Medicare commissioner reviewing the judgment.
